

DEATH FROM GRIEF AT SISTER'S FATE

Brother of Margaret Lynch, Who Committed Suicide, in Long Island Cemetery, Expires at His Father's Home.

HEART DISEASE BROUGHT ON BY HIS SORROW.

Young Francis Had Been Girl's Constant Companion in Early Years, and His One Thought Was Vengeance.

Still another great sorrow has come upon the family of Margaret Lynch, the unfortunate young woman who committed suicide in the Greenfield, L. I., cemetery. Sinking under the burden of humiliation and grief at his sister's tragic end, Francis Joseph Lynch died to-day at the home of his father, Edward M. Lynch, at 34 Vernon avenue, Brooklyn.

The immediate cause of death was valvular heart disease. His heart had always been weak, but until the death of his sister he had seemed robust. Since then he has brooded constantly, and gradually fell into a decline. He was thirty years old, and he and Margaret had been chums since childhood.

Catherine Lynch, another daughter of the grief-stricken family, said to-day that her brother's death was undoubtedly due to grief over the fate of Margaret.

She said that he was only two years younger than his dead sister and they had been inseparable companions.

He was away from home at the time of Margaret Lynch's entanglement with Oswald Maune. When he learned of it he could not rest until the story had been given to the world. He conceived a bitter enmity for the elderly man who had brought shame and disgrace upon the family and it was through a letter from him that the officials of Nassau County first learned of the identity of the dead woman and Mr. Maune's connection with her.

His grief at that time shattered his health and he gradually became weaker and weaker. While his sister Catherine and his heartbroken mother were for the first time disclosing the sad circumstances leading up to their daughter's death to an Evening World reporter, Francis Lynch stood in the doorway of the back parlor and shaking his fists in helpless anger said:

"If I had but one day of health and strength I would settle with that man." When his mother and sister went to the grave in Greenfield cemetery to identify the body of Margaret he was too weak to go with them. He said then, however, that if he could summon sufficient strength to go to the cemetery and face Oswald Maune with the story of his duplicity he would gladly do so.

He was always cheerful and patient, and his mother said that he was a day, "but he could think of nothing but poor Margaret. There is no doubt at all that brooding hastened his death. He died of a broken heart."

Mrs. Lynch, the mother, is crushed by her son's death. Though naturally of a strong physique she seemed hardly able to bear up under her fresh weight of sorrow.

WAS NURSING SICK FRIEND, WIFE'S PLEA

Sued for Absolute Divorce, Mrs. Ketcham, of Yonkers, Declares in Court that She Is Victim of a Conspiracy.

Mrs. Lyle V. Ketcham came down from her Yonkers home this afternoon, her tall, willowy figure enshrouded in a black velvet costume of severe cut, to defend herself against the charges made by her husband, Frank B. Ketcham, in his suit for absolute divorce, and to do her best to convince Justice Scott and a jury in the Supreme Court that she had been the victim of a conspiracy.

Mrs. Ketcham's mother accompanied her, and Chauncey Truax, a brother of Justice Truax, defended her.

The Ketchams were married in 1901, and the pale-faced young wife is accused of going to the Hotel Adelphi with a man on the evening of Dec. 16 last.

Her reply to this is that a detective employed by her husband became a boarder at her mother's house, and, by ingratiating himself, often took Mrs. Ketcham and her mother-in-law to the hotel on that evening she was with him. She said that she had taken refuge after separating from her husband, to places of amusement.

That on Dec. 16 Mrs. Ketcham was in a twenty-third street car when the detective, variously known as Thomas Tompkins, Brown and Hayward, entered the car. Presently, feigning sickness and on the plea that he could not get up, she was stopped, and he got into the car with her. She said that Mrs. Ketcham took him into the Adelphi from the car at Tenth avenue. A room was procured for him and Mrs. Ketcham stayed to nurse him.

She says that they had been there only a few minutes when the door was broken in and Mr. Ketcham's brother Charles and his cousin rushed in and shouted: "We have now found out all we want," after which they left.

THOUSANDS SEE AIRSHIP'S FLIGHT

Baldwin's Balloon, with Great Wings Flapping, Rises from World's Fair Grounds and Passes Over St. Louis.

GOES UP A MILE AND LANDS OUTSIDE CITY.

Pointed Straight Up, Then Took a Horizontal Position, While Throngs Cheered—Cigar-Shaped and Driven by Motor.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 25.—An aeronaut in the airship of T. C. Baldwin, of Los Angeles, Cal., caused excitement at the World's Fair grounds to-day by suddenly appearing over the Transpacific Building at a height of 1,000 feet.

The presence of the airship was not noticed by the majority of the World's Fair visitors during the flight from the Exposition grounds, at a distance of about one mile, but the fact of the flight being made soon attracted the attention of thousands, and the airship was greeted with continued cheering.

After being pulled from the aerodrome the bags of ballast were cut loose and the airship rose several hundred feet into the air. At that point Knabenshue started the motor and, shifting his weight toward the stern, pointed the bow upward at a slight angle.

The powerful wings bent the air and the airship rose an appreciable distance before Knabenshue again shifted his weight, this time trimming the ship so that it rode horizontally.

The airship passed over the business section of St. Louis, about five miles from the World's Fair grounds. Its height was estimated at about one mile, but it was impossible to tell whether or not it was under the control of the aeronaut.

The Baldwin airship is constructed along the lines of the popular conception of a flying machine. The buoyancy is secured by a large, cigar-shaped balloon, and the car, which is long and narrow, is suspended from the balloon by many wire ropes.

The motive power is secured by means of two large propellers, or wings, one on each side of the car, run by a compact motor located at the stern.

The airship started from the aerodrome, and was controlled by E. B. Knabenshue, of Toledo, O. It was announced that the ascent was simply a trial trip and not an attempt to qualify for the World's Fair $100,000 prize.

The airship was in plain view when about eight miles south of the city. From what can be seen it appears that Knabenshue has the airship under control and was maneuvering.

After passing the Cascades at the Fair grounds the airship took a southeasterly course and in a short time had left the boundaries of the World's Fair grounds and was passing over the residence district of the city, where the unrelaxed gaze of the throngs watching the progress of the flight with breathless interest.

The appearance of the flying machine over the business section of the city was the signal for great excitement. Business was practically suspended for nearly a half hour, while throngs filled the streets and watched every movement of the strange craft.

Knabenshue brought the airship to the ground in South St. Louis, a distance of about eight miles in a direct line from the starting point. He landed easily and the balloon and machinery are not injured, it is stated.
